Overview of a Commercial Driver's License

dmv.idaho.gov

Do you need a commercial driver's license?

This brochure will help you determine if you need a commercial driver's license and if so, what kind?

There are three types of Commercial Driver's Licenses:

- Class A
- Class B
- Class C

Types of CDL

CLASS A

Combination vehicles with a gross combination weight rating (GVCWR) of 26,001 pound or more if the GVWR of the vehicle being towed is greater than 10,000 pounds. A driver with a Class A license may, with the proper endorsements, operate vehicles requiring a Class B, C, or D license. GVWR is assigned by the manufacturer.

CLASS B

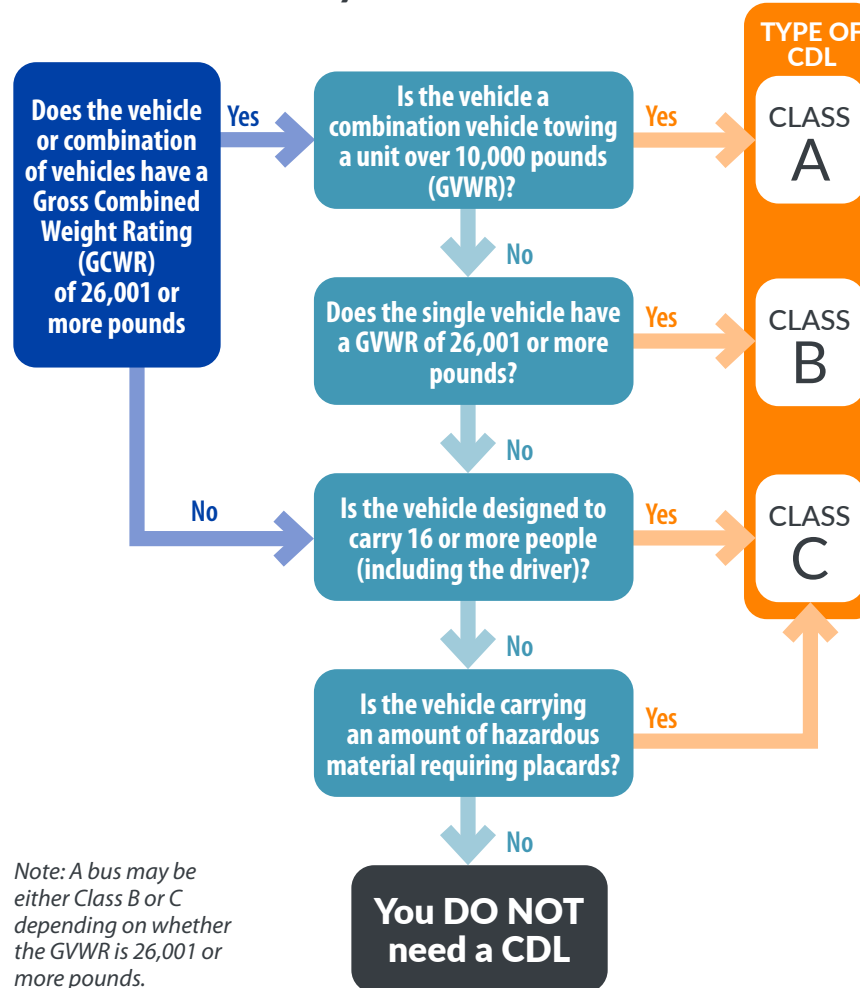

Single vehicles with a GVWR of 26,001 or more pounds, or any such vehicle towing a vehicle of 10,000 pounds GVWR or less. A driver with a Class B license, may, with the proper endorsements, operate vehicles requiring a Class C or D license.

CLASS C

Vehicles not meeting the definitions of Class A or B, but are either designed to carry 16 or more people (including the driver) or carry an amount of hazardous materials requiring placards. A driver with a Class C license may also operate vehicles requiring a Class D license.

Drivers of passenger cars need a Class D driver's license.

Which Class of Commercial Driver's License do you need?

Note: A bus may be either Class B or C depending on whether the GVWR is 26,001 or more pounds.

The presence of air brakes or a tank does not always define a vehicle that needs a CDL. Call for assistance.

Endorsement Types:

Double/Triple Trailer (T)

Hazardous Materials (H)

Passenger (P)
(vehicles designed to carry 16 or more people including the driver)

School Bus (S)

Tanker (N)

Exempt Vehicles:

Drivers of the following vehicle types may be exempt from obtaining a Commercial Driver's License:

Recreation Vehicles for personal use

Military Vehicles

Emergency Vehicles

Farm Vehicles
